AMERICA'S VOICE

Few documents have been fraught with greater significance than the American message to Germany. On that message depends not only the termination of the present grave international issue, but also the future of American aloofness, of America's ability to live her own life in her own way, unswayed by the quarrels of Europe, and unhampered by the jealousies and hatreds of a continent gone mad.

Weighing well the momentousness of the message, the president has constructed it with surpassing skill. To Germany is offered a direct choice, and the better way is made easy. Not in terms of haughtiness or of menace, but rather as a definite clarification of conditions which had become murky and obscure, the United States deplors to Germany the unendurable results of a policy which has tended to destroy the fundamental rights of humanity.

Statesmanlike and firm, yet carefully avoiding any terms of offense, the note correctly and adequately mirrors the sentiment of the American people.

The little humming bird can do better than the aeroplane, for in its migration across the Gulf of Mexico it flies over 500 miles in a single night. Nearly all birds, in fact, show in their soaring and sailing that they are proficient in the use of several factors in the art of flying that have not yet been mastered either in principle or practice by the most skillful of modern aviators. A vulture or a crane, after a few preliminary wing beats, sets its wings and mounts in wide sweeping circles to a great height, overcoming gravity with no exertion apparent to human vision even when assisted by the most powerful telescopes.

POLITICS AFFECTED

Possibility of international complications figuratively has "spilled the beans" for professional president-makers for the time being. Until the Louisiana incident the politician was doing fairly well in his quadrantal act of grooming favorite sons. Then came the tragedy that shocked the world, and interest in candidacies died precipitately. Of what avail to attempt fires of enthusiasm for any patriot, when the fuses of popular indorsement sputtered and went out in the chill atmosphere of public indifference?

Matters of international import are absorbing and engaging the attention of the people of the United States as never before. War of the magnitude of the European conflict, like an octopus, stretches its tentacles to all peoples in all countries. Blood or racial ties bind tighter as the awful tale of slaughter is unfolded; business shrinks; credits contract; commerce slows up or ceases as the world looks upon the conflict of nations. There is no escaping its weird and awful spell. While half the civilized world is locked in a death struggle the other half can do little more than gaze spell-bound upon the conflict.

Just now, with the rights of America on the high seas flouted and invaded, there is more tension than usual, as the Government declares its unalterable purpose to assert and defend those rights. The singular unanimity of approval of this purpose by the whole people discloses a real national spirit that some critics have entirely denied and others derided.

Little wonder, then, that politics is uninteresting to the masses. Their minds and thoughts are centered otherwise.

The condition may not be an un-mixed blessing. Instead of taking eighteen months or more to elect a president, it may prove beneficial to the entire country to let the question rest for a long time. Many a worthy candidacy has been irretrievably ruined by being sprung too early. The void of entrants, six or eight months hence, will be just as likely a lot of men as can be suggested now.

Serious-minded men have even looked with approval upon the suggestion that it might be well some time to permit the delegates of the two great parties in convention assembled, coming from all sections as they do, representing the views of the people in every part of the United States, and with a good working knowledge at least of the qualities and capacities of the men suggested as candidates, to make the selection of a candidate untrammelled by the work of the politician. That will scarcely come to pass, as long as men have ambitions. Anyhow, the country will probably get along pretty well with a shorter pre-convention campaign.—Cincinnati Enquirer.
